I took this image by myself at P T forest, approximately 4miles away. I have cropped this image in an eclipsed shape using the feathered effect in Paint Shop Pro. I think this is fit for purpose and target audience as it a realistic impression of the type of activity and terrain that mountain biking at the Olympics entails. It is fit for the target audience because, as Sarah said, it looks professional. I think this image effectively promotes the sport of mountain biking as it is fairly unrecognised as an Olympic sport and this image effectively portrays the essence of mountain biking.

This is another image taken by myself at the same location PT forest. I think this is fit for purpose as it displays some of the obstacles that the mountain bikers would have to overcome. I think this image contrasts well with the other two images I have taken of a slope and this promotes the different aspects of Mountain biking in the Olympics.

I haven't developed this image other then resizing it, as I have done with the other three, to a different size which is suitable. I haven't developed this image because I think the geometric rectangle contrasts with the eclipses which makes it fit for audience as it is appealing and interesting. I think this is fit for purpose as it yet again, demonstrates another of the technical aspects of mountain biking that would be experienced in the Olympics.
